Why do you do what you do?
Fellows gave visual responses to this question during our “Legacy” convening.
OVERVIEW

Seven years ago in November 2013, at the invitation of a core group of visionary Tucson-based philanthropists and leaders, The OpEd Project, The Women’s Foundation of Southern Arizona and The University of Arizona launched a Public Voices Fellowship in the region. The fellowship was designed as an experiment in changing history, by accelerating the ideas and public impact of underrepresented experts, and women. The year-long program—which includes four in-person convenings, a nationally-acclaimed curriculum, individual journalist mentors, and a broad peer network across the nation—also aimed to create a space and time for fellows to come together across different disciplines and backgrounds, to share and surface ideas, hold conversations across difference, and explore what it takes to make our knowledge count.

Over the past seven years, 140 Tucson-based women, representing wide-ranging fields and backgrounds, have convened, collaborated and supported each other. They have forged deeply meaningful relationships across fields, generations and disciplines, and taken on new leadership roles in their disparate fields, communities, institutions and lives. Together they have shaped the conversation that will one day be our history, and organized an ongoing effort to further their collective legacy in and beyond Tucson.

One key commitment of the fellowship, and this legacy, is to produce concrete and measurable outcomes. Between them, the seven Tucson Public Voices Fellowship cohorts have produced over 600 concrete successes (op-eds and more). Many of these successes also led to expansive impact in the public sphere, driving interview requests, expert citations, invitations to speak at academic conferences and more. Fellows’ ideas started conversations with influential advocacy organizations, prompted responses from policymakers, and sparked intellectual collaborations.

Meanwhile, each year incoming Tucson fellows join an expanding network of Public Voices Fellows nationwide. (There are now over 1,500 Public Voices Fellows nationwide.) In the eight years since the first fellowship was pioneered at Yale University, more than fifteen peer institutions have come on board. They include: Columbia, Northwestern, UT Austin, Dartmouth, Stanford, Cornell, Emory, Princeton, The Ford Foundation, The Ms. Foundation and more. The Tucson fellows represent an integral part of this influential network of peers across the nation, which allows for knowledge sharing and innovation across institutions, and serves as one of the nation’s most powerful networks of public impact thought leadership.
RESULTS

ALL YEARS (2013-2020)

- 140 Tucson Public Voices Fellows, driving extensive knowledge and experience into key forums of thought leadership, and the important conversations of our age.
- 569 concrete successes (op-eds, TV and radio appearances, interviews, speeches and more), more than doubling the cumulative target of 280 successes across all fellowship years. A comprehensive list is below.

YEAR 7 (2020)

- 56 concrete successes, sparking a variety of other media and impact, including op-eds, expert citations, keynote speeches, interviews, awards, and more.
- 54 published op-eds, in a range of influential forums.

FELLOWS’ FEEDBACK

We collect feedback through anonymous surveys at least three times during every fellowship, to track personal reactions and individual development. We share survey questions in advance with our partners, and we share full, unredacted results. We endeavor to have at least 75% of fellows respond before we tabulate results, to ensure a broad spectrum of feedback. Survey data across cohorts indicates that the Tucson fellows overwhelmingly recommend the Public Voices Fellowship. Highlights and a brief summary appear below.

- Near 100% positive support from Tucson Fellows.
- Across all surveys, fellows agreed that they would recommend the Public Voices Fellowship to their colleagues. (9.61 out of 10)
- Fellows agreed that convenings caused them to reflect on their sense of purpose. (9.50 out of 10)
- Fellows agreed that the fellowship has helped advance themselves as thought leaders, and empowered them to think bigger and longer-term about their legacy. (9.56 out of 10)
Fellows from the 2020 cohort have had extensive impact in the public sphere as a result of this fellowship. Select highlights appear below.

- Following the publication of her Washington Post op-ed, “Holiday Advice if you’re Struggling with Infertility,” Kerri Lopez-Howell testified in front of Arizona’s Senate Finance Committee about women’s sexual health and the need for employer’s to provide better access to reproductive health, and used the tools she learned in the fellowship when speaking directly to lobbyists, lawmakers, and insurance companies.

- Following the publication of Barbara Eiswerth’s op-ed in The Hill on sustainability and the United States food supply, Barbara was contacted by curators at TEDx Tucson and was invited to speak at this year’s event. Barbara’s ideas were also prominently featured in a New York Times profile of her organization the Iskashitaa Refugee Network (IRN).

- Theresa Crimmins published extensively throughout the fellowship year, with 10 pieces published across Scientific American, The Conversation, The Arizona Daily Star, and other outlets. Following the shelter-in-place orders that forced schools to send students for online learning, Theresa mentored her son Zachary to write and successfully pitch an op-ed on the topic to Arizona Daily Star editor Sarah Gassen. The piece ran shortly after, and has since become one of a few model examples OpEd Project journalists/facilitators have been using with other cohorts and with their undergraduate students.

- Heather Mace’s Washington Post op-ed, “This teacher and mother of 3 says she may quit if forced back to school, and so will other educators like her” sparked widespread conversation on the topic, resulting in, among other things, profiles on NBC (seen here) and ABC’s Good Morning America (seen here).

- Amita Nathwani’s co-authored op-ed on Ayurveda, Immunity and COVID-19 was published in Thrive Global, prompting editors at Thrive Global India to reach out with an invitation to contribute regularly.

- Arianna Sholes-Douglas' widely circulated Arizona Daily Star op-ed, “George Floyd’s killing has white people appalled and black people exhausted," prompted her to formalize her activism on the topic, and found her new organization Mothers Against Racism In America (MARIA). The piece can be found here.

- The publishing house Shambala came across Amita Nathwani’s op-ed entitled “Love in the time of COVID” in Thrive Global, and invited her to submit a proposal for a book. Amita had self-published a collection of short stories on the topic in February, which she promptly sent.
CONTINUED IMPACT

Fellows from our first six cohorts (2013-2019) have continued to generate profound public impact well after the close of their active fellowship periods. Two of many examples appear below.

- Paloma Beamer (Tucson Public Voices Fellow, Year 3) collaborated with a colleague on an op-ed that appeared in The Conversation on coping with the fear of flying in a post-COVID19 world. After generating 100,000 views, the piece was picked up by CNN, and has since been viewed by over 1 million people. A link is here. In a letter to our team, Paloma writes:

  “One day, I will write the story about the voice this fellowship drove me to discover, and use. I know I’m in a much better place because of it. Among other things, the success achieved from my recent piece in The Conversation was in large part due to the training and experience I received from the Public Voices Fellowship.”

- Gabriela Cázares-Kelly (Tucson Public Voices Fellow, Year 4) is running for the office of Pima County Recorder, and within the last week won in the democratic primary by a wide margin! She would be the first native american to ever hold an elected county-wide office. Gabriela ran on a commitment to increasing voter accessibility and communication, especially in communities of color that are often disenfranchised. In a letter to our team, Gabriela writes:

  “I’ve spent a lot of time thinking about what I’m up to these days and how I got to be where I am. I didn’t participate in the program intending to become a politician, but when time came to prepare my campaign website, I already had this impressive collection of articles that clearly documents my values. Tucson Public Voices helped me understand that although I could clearly see and was experiencing injustices everywhere, it meant almost nothing if I couldn’t somehow document them and more specifically create a call to action.

  The experience was life-changing for me."
"As a result of the fellowship, I’ve felt empowered to speak out on topics I previously would have stayed quiet on. I spoke to the state finance committee about my topic. I also spoke on National Public Radio (NPR) and Arizona Public Media (AZPM) about philanthropy inequities. In addition, now that I’ve realized my leadership role from this fellowship, I have been leading my board into brand new equity spaces.

In addition, as a direct result of this fellowship, I called Pima County and demanded money to help the Sunnyside Foundation (these next two weeks we are closing on a pretty large grant that I know I wouldn’t have otherwise landed). I only picked up the phone because I could say confidently “Wait. I am an expert. I can absolutely make this call.”

The leadership experience from this fellowship has been life changing for me.”

- Kerri Lopez-Howell, 2020 Tucson Public Voices Fellow

“I have discovered through this process that taking a stand for what I know to be true is not only liberating, but in a fellowship like this it can actually be a real joy. The relationships I’ve made with the women in this cohort are crucially important to increasing my understanding of so many issues that were not previously a part of my sphere. And it feels safe to explore them, even in my ignorance, here in this space. I’m so very grateful for that.”

- Theresa Crimmins, 2020 Tucson Public Voices Fellow

“Our Vice Mayor asked me for help in crafting his letter to the Mayor regarding his concerns about reopening too soon. I helped him bring focus and direction to his letter, including ‘why’ each point was important to the wellbeing of the citizens of our town. He later told me the Mayor said they were going to use the letter as their template for our community health plan. My letter, I’m told, contributed to the conversation at all levels, and I realized that you can make an impact behind the scenes as well. The Public Voices experience has been life changing for me.”

- Maggie Trinkle, 2020 Tucson Public Voices Fellow

“I have been approached by an education blog wanting to republish my piece (and pay me). Sharing my ideas has also opened up many conversations with friends and colleagues that would not have happened otherwise. It has begun to shape my identity as one that includes the title of ‘expert,’ which is so personally fulfilling and meaningful. Thank you.”

- Heather Mace, 2020 Tucson Public Voices Fellow
"[I would recommend the Public Voices Fellowship to my colleagues] because it’s a life-changing experience. The fellowship has developed me as a leader and a professional. It helped me cultivate courage around my opinions, knowledge, and leadership ability — it was an excellent writing fellowship, but an even more powerful course in leadership development. I am a totally different leader because of this fellowship."

"I now confidently raise funds for my foundation as an expert. I also now participate in media interviews and advocacy work as an expert. I stopped waiting to be ‘old enough’ or ‘experienced enough’ [and now] own my role as an expert in the field.”

"I have received feedback from strangers all over the country about my work and about the realities our kids face. This fellowship has helped me reach an audience I had no chance of reaching before and with it has helped to plant the seeds of change for criminal justice reform.”

"Being successful at sharing my message accelerates the difference I can make in my community.”

"I have contributed to the national conversation about how school districts can support teachers with children as we consider going back to school. I have started a dialogue with school board members in my community, and they are sharing my work with the public.”

"This fellowship has brought me to realize a vision for a small business, which will impact my community."

"I have taken the lead on two academic collaborative papers - one which has been published and the other in the submission process now.”

"This has taught me to be a better advocate — I’ve started writing more grants (that we’ve received) for my organization — and I’m starting to realize I need to think about my long-term career plans outside of what I traditionally would have otherwise.”

"Instead of waiting to be invited to the table where big decisions are made, I’m inviting myself.

"The fellowship has pushed me to be clearer in stating my opinions, and to realize that I can share them without expecting that others will agree. It has helped me to think about myself as someone with a clear purpose and vision for their future.”
“This fellowship has impacted my confidence to speak up on topics that are important to me in ways I could not have imagined a year ago.”

“The connection and skills that the fellowship has fostered between our cohort was an incredible anchor during this past year.”

“This project has given me confidence in the power of my word, and a community of empowered women speaking truth in the world.”

“The fellowship not only helped me develop as a leader and a professional, it helped me cultivate courage in my opinions and leadership ability.”

“The connections I have made are invaluable, and this experience has stretched me so far beyond my comfort zone, in the best ways possible.”

“This has been an incredible experience for me. I have learned so much, not only about the nuts and bolts of opinion writing and submission, but about the importance of my own voice, and the advocacy that is possible when I use the tools available to me.”

“This was an amazing learning opportunity. I strongly recommend it to anyone who has an interest in sharing their story.”

“I have been struggling my whole life with taking up space in the world, and this Fellowship helped me take some of the necessary steps I was afraid to take. In the last year I’ve started practicing being a force in the world.”

“Since the start of this fellowship, I have been invited to appear as an expert source on two podcast interviews and have been asked to present at a state-wide conference this summer. The impact has motivated my nonprofit organization’s board of directors to adopt an advocacy policy and to receive training on developing voice.”

“Still can’t believe I published in The Hill. I will be on the radio next week as a result, on community-based KXCI with Mrs. Green, [a show with] more than 35,000 listeners each week. We also have a state bill in progress, SB1206, and a lobbyist group in Arizona for refugees speaking out.”

“I feel more confident handling media requests and creating ways to share my voice. I’ve been interviewed by university and local news sources (AZPM), and a quote of mine was picked up in The Hill.”

“I published two books, one on grief that is now being used in book clubs across the country. I’ve also spoken to community leaders to help leverage future funding for Tucson Public Voices.”
“Writing my piece on women and Universal Basic Income inspired me to travel to Iowa to canvas for Andrew Yang.”

“My experience as a Tucson Public Voices fellow has made me a more confident advocate for my students, and for ending mass incarceration. This journey has empowered and pushed me out of my bubble and into the world, where my voice can have an impact.”
